Taking great photos is not easy, and anyone who has had to go the extra mile for a perfect picture knows it. These hard-working photographers all worked hard and gave an amazing amount of effort to take a great photo, and the results show that great photos require some bravery and perseverance from photographers.

These great photos all capture a moment that is perfectly timed and speaks to the moment it was taken. Whether it was artistic or political, each great photo tells the story of the hard-working photographer who was behind the camera at that moment.

These 16 great photos took an immense amount of effort from artists who are not only trying to express their vision but share the unique wonders of the world with a wider audience. They say a picture is worth a thousand words, but these great photos say so much more, not just about their content, but about the people behind the photo who were willing to put themselves out there to capture an indelible image.

1. This photo, captured by Indonesian photographer Okka Supardan, must have required a great amount of patience and timing, but it paid off by capturing the action, suspense, and effort in one shot.

11. Is taking a great photo worth getting this close to a great white shark? Possibly, because this image is amazing (and also a little bit terrifying).

Thomas P. Peschak for National Geographic

12. Photographer Carl De Keyzer was given access and permission to take photos while in North Korea, which is not easy to acquire. His images of the llittle-seen nation are stunning.
